Ebony Ava Harper is a Sacramento-based award-winning nationally recognized activist and philanthropist. She's the first open Black trans woman to work at a foundation (The California Endowment) in the nation. Through her professional career and her activism, Harper has helped to uplift and shift culture for marginalized communities across the country. From creating healing spaces to employment opportunities to spearheading the Chyna Gibson Memorial Mural detailing the epidemic of transgender murders to LGBTQ+ community and sex workers needing a shoulder to cry on, Harper never fails to show up for her community time and time again.
